

very particular occasions; nor even then, unless such allowance be entered as the last article in the final account; but on no pretence whatever ought he to give any allowance for monies paid by executors or administrators, for part of a distributive share, or for the widows thirds, but refer all such executors or administrators to produce their receipts to the county court, after the balance is transmitted: He should then, only confine himself to debts paid away, and disbursements incident to the administration, without interfering in the least with any payments made, tending towards distribution.

Reduction of coins. As proper to this place, I shall subjoin the following table, of the reduction of coins, as valued in the prerogative-office, together with their practical way of calculation.

T A B L E.

£. 100 sterling money is equal to $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{£. } 133\frac{1}{3} \text{ cur. money; or} \\ \text{£. } 166\frac{2}{3} \text{ com. currency.} \end{array} \right.$

£. 100 current money is equal to $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{£. 75 sterling money; or} \\ \text{£. 125 com. currency.} \end{array} \right.$

£. 100 com. cur- } { £. 60 sterling money; or rency is equal to } { £. 80 current money.

O R.